Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Canary Islands

Tenerife is the largest island in the Canary Archipelago. Like its brethren, Tenerife was formed by fierce volcanic activity. Its landscape remains dotted with volcanic cones and areas of intense geothermal activity. Towering over the island is Mt Teide, an extinct volcano that, at 12,200 feet above sea level, is the highest peak in Spanish territory. Santa Cruz de Tenerife is the island's capital and your port of call.

Tenerife's north shore is separated from the south by rugged mountains, creating a rain shadow. The majority of the island's most recent resorts are found in the serene and parched south shore.
